CUNNINGHAM'S STORY

Says He Was Not at Mr. Richardson's House.

THEY MET IN THE LOT

First, That He Fell from His the Trees.

The Daily Press is able this morning to lay before its readers Mr. Joseph Cunningham's story of the tragic scene enacted at the Chesupeake and Ohio depot last Monson, who had come up on the dustice of the train, fired the shot that wounded him. Such is Mr. Cunningham's story.

Mr. Richardson was seen yesterday afternoon. He was not asked to tails for publication, because the tragedy in which he played so conspicuous a part has cost him pangs as bitter and deer and terrible as any that his victim has suffered since it occurred. Weeks months ago the cruel chain of circum stances which led to it left its curse upon him. disturbed the peace of the home he loved and which by patient toil he had built for the wife and chil dren beneath its roof. He is sorry. But he felt that his manthood was at stake—more, infinitely more, his honor, and not his alone, but hers, was being weighed in the roguish scales of scandal mongers, and the day came when he could no longer resist the unseer power that forced him on to right the wrong and pluck out the tongue of foul and venomous slander. No one accuses his wife of wrong doing. That is not it: But there was the sting oceant in the whispered insimuation, the deadly gossip that went from ear to death in the whispered insimuation, the car and upon which those who find delight in soiling a woman's name and robbing a home of its dearest level fatten and flourish like well fed swine The cloud that broke his peace and darkened his life was due, he says, the magning has been joe's friend, had aided him when there was none other to whom he could go and he prayed that there might be some way by which the light that had been withdrawn could be found. And so he did no more than any other man with a spark of honor within his breast would have done.

Sad Scenes at Old Point Yesterday Afternoon. At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon Bartery G, of the Fifth Artiflery, in command of Captain Reed, and Battery E, of the Sixth, Captain Sage, left Fort Monroe for Tampa, Fla. Early in the day a large barge on which were six Seaboard Air Line coaches swung alongside the dock and very soon thereafter the work of loading war paraphernalla was commenced. It was kept up until 3 o'clock, when the last tentpole was snugly packed away and everything was in readiness for the men to march aboard. In the meantime for years, that made them qualt when the hour of their final parting came. In groups gathered, here and there women went aloud while the warrior husband stood by bound by that terrible silent sorrow which "whispers the o'erfraught heart and bids it break." The bables—God bless them—the little boys and the neatly dressed little girls in their spotless frocks, who clung to their mothers' skirts in that first bitter lesson of war—they too wept.

But at other points along the line there were other scenes—seenes in which attractive misses in becoming summer attire took part. They chatted and laughed with the men, told them to be good boys and to fight in the spirit of brave American soldlers and to go out expecting to return again.

battery G came to Fort Monroe 1 teen years ago and was the oldest hi tery at the garrison. Sixteen of members are married and leave the families here. Battery E came to C Point on the 19th of May last fro Washington, where it had been stationed some time.

George W. Cable, the ever-popular author of "Old Creole Days," has a most interesting family of daughters, which rather overshedow the one son of the house Nevertheless, Willie, who is seven years old, keeps up the reputation of the family for saying good things by an occasional remark worth printing.

Willie's besetting sin is lazinessfault about which he gets considerable chaffing from his little sister Dorothea. One day when they were all playing house and Willie, Indian like, was let ting Dorothea do most of the work the little girl said:
"Willie, you are the laziest boy that ever lived. You just crawl round."

"I wish," said Willie, "that I was a thousand times lazier than I am, 'cause I couldn't move at all thon."
